NYU’s Center for Ancient Studies is offering grants for summer or term-time study through its ANTONINA S. RANIERI INTERNATIONAL SCHOLARS FUND.

These grants are intended to support academic travel abroad by undergraduate or graduate students in any department or program of Arts and Science who are studying any aspect of the ancient world. Amounts vary, but most grants are generally under $2,000 and may be taken in conjunction with other awards. The Ranieri Fund supports both independent study (e.g., research at foreign libraries) and participation in formal programs (e.g., Goethe Institut language courses, archaeological digs, and international conferences). Students who will have graduated before the proposed travel abroad takes place are not eligible for the grants.

Students should submit a brief description of the project explaining how it relates to their studies, an itemized budget, a CV, and a detailed letter of support from a FAS faculty sponsor. APPLICATIONS ARE DUE BY MONDAY, APRIL 4, 2016 for this summer or the next academic year. Decisions will be announced on or about Monday, May 2, 2016.
